Treating Stretch Marks: [Live Video] Promising Stretch Marks Cure?

There's another new kid in town for treating stretch marks. It's a newly approved FDA laser treatment for stretch marks called the "Lux." As can be expected, it is not cheap. It costs between $500 and $1,000 per session and you typically require three treatments.

For some women it maybe worth it, but ultimately only you can decide if this is something that you want to go for. Remember, that just because something is "FDA approved" doesn't mean it is effective. It can mean that it is generally recognized as safe.

If you found that video as informative as I did but you don't want to undergo such a procedure yourself, you'll most certainly benefit from the Zenmed Stretta three tier scar removal formula to reduce the appearance of your stretch marks, and it won't cost you a small fortune either.
